Nestled in the historic town of Beaconsfield, Tasmania, this charming old miner's cottage whispers tales of the region's rich gold rush history. The front porch, adorned with a classic rocking chair, invites visitors to pause and soak in the tranquility of the surroundings. I'm sure there were many countless evenings spent gazing at the starry skies or sharing tales with fellow miners over cups of tea. Although modest in size the cottage boasts 3 generous sized bedrooms and a separate dining space that has the potential to create a 4th bedroom for a growing family, and then there's the sunroom easily converted to a study space that soaks up all the morning sun. Although the cottage is blessed with maturity it is move in ready with an updated and spacious kitchen and bathroom. Outside, the cottage's backyard transports you to a private oasis. A modest garden, brimming with native flora and perhaps a few colorful blooms, offers a serene escape. A well-worn path leads to a small garden shed. With 2 access driveways the cottage boasts a single car garage with electric remote access.
